James Senall elected to two statewide positions

James Senall, president of High Tech Rochester Inc., has been elected to serve as chairman of the Business Incubator Association of New York State for 2012-2013.

He has also been selected to serve as a member of the board of directors of the New York State Economic Development Council.

In these roles, not only will he help direct the larger activities of these two organization but also to represent the Rochester area's position as a leading area of economic development in the state.

The Business Incubator Association of NYS has more than 35 members operating nearly 50 physical facilities - such as High Tech Rochester's Lennox Tech Enterprise Center and Rochester BioVenture Center - and virtual programs statewide. Its members are business incubators in the higher-education, economic development, government and private sectors.

The New York State Economic Development Council is the state's principal organization representing economic development professionals. Its 900 members include the leadership of industrial development agencies, local development corporations, commercial and investment banks, underwriters, bond counsels, utilities, chambers of commerce and private corporations.

NYSEDC has been serving New York's development professionals for more than 30 years. The Board of Directors and members of NYSEDC represent the highest standards of their profession, and have unparalleled experience and expertise working with state and local economic development programs.
